Parties in Tennessee.

Those who have been critically watching events in Tennessee for the past year are aware that important political changes are impending there, and that in all probability the next campaign—1882—will see that State wrested from the control of the Fourbons, either by a straight Republican triumph or by some such combination as that which triumphed in the Old Dominion. The Democrats of Tennessee are as badly divided up on State issues as were the Democrats of Virginia at the inception of the Mahone movement. Indeed it may be said to be in a far worse condition, for while their party in Virginia was divided into only tree party in Virginia was divi in a far worse condition, for while their plainant. party in Virginia was divided into only two dollar that was not contracted in antebellum times or that was not incurred to aid the rebellion. They utterly repudiate all debt incurred by such State administrations as Parson Brownlow's or any other "nigger administration," as they | and phrase it. This faction is principally made up of the irreconcilable confederates, who still live in the war and remounce all the results of that crisis as they should the devil and all his works. They are the implacables, the die-in-the-lastmake them prominent, and at the same time fill their pockets. These fellows are all for, the party and No. 1, and might very properly be termed the No. 1 Democracy. They are all for harmony and union in the party. They are mony and union in the party. They are ready to pay every dollar the State owes, legitimately or illegitimately, if that will bring harmony and success, or they are ready to repudiate every last cent, if that will insure their triumph. In short, thus time fill their pockets. These fellows are will insure their triumph. In short, they are thoroughly unscrupulous as to means if they can secure the desired end. They are now shouting "Harmony! harmony!" as they know that without harmony in the party their day is over, and they will have to retire from the well-filled mangers of the State to munch the diminutive nubbins of private life.

Third-The third faction is made up of Third—The third faction is made up of the very best men in the Democratic party of the State; men who are interested in business enterprises throughout the State; men who know the benefits and advantages of an untarnished repuintion in the money marts of the world; men who are anxious to rebuild the waste to be presented is exceedingly attractive. gmen who are anxious to rebuild the waste places left by the war; who want to see the State debt honestly paid, or put in the process of rapid liquidation. These men are the real backbone of the Democratic party. They have gone just as far on the Bourbon highway as they ever expect to, and they are now determined that the party must either take a new course, or they will disrupt it. They are the men who pay most of the taxes, and who give respectability to the party, and in moral power they far excel both the others. They know that they are in the right, and also know what they want to do exactly, which gives them a great advantage in the pending struggle for the su-

From this hasty review of the situation it will be seen that the Democracy in Tennessee is in "bad case." Factions Nos. 1 and 3 can never harmonize without such an otter abandonment of principle as would render them infamous in the eyes of the people of the State, and the antagonism between these two factions is so intense and bitter that faction No. 2 is atterly powerless to secure harmony and co-operation between them. The Republicans of the State are so nearly equal in numbers to all these antagonistic factions that it will require but a very slight defection to throw the State into their hands. The true policy and the one likely to be adopted is to secure co-operation between the Republicans and the honest debt-paying anti-Bourbon Demo-

The Republican leaders of Tennessee fully appreciate the propitious gravity of the situation, and will co-operate with all liberal men in striking Bourbonism a blow there from which it never can recover.
